

Patrick Holford

24th August 2007

Dear Patrick,

I am writing to ask if you could modify the way that you refer to your relationship to the School on publicity material, websites, in press releases and so on.

It would be helpful to us if you could refer to yourself as 'Visiting Professor in the School of Social Sciences and Law at the University of Teesside', rather than Visiting Professor, University of Teesside. It would also be very helpful if you did not add anything to the title such as 'Visiting Professor in mental health and/or nutrition' without further discussion with the Dean of School.

On your website, could we ask you to use the following line: 'In 2007 he was conferred Visiting Professor to the School of Social Sciences and Law at the University of Teesside'.

As you may know, we have a large School of Health and Social Care at the University wherein there are several senior researchers involved in nutrition research. External sources may, as a consequence become confused about the association between your area of work and theirs.

It is our usual practice in the School for Visiting Professors to work in this way and I am sorry if we have not clarified this fully after your appointment.

If you would like to discuss this further, please get in touch. I am away next week on leave, but Dr Barry Doyle (Assistant Dean Research) and Dr Barbara McGuinness (Deputy Dean) will be available to talk to you.

With best wishes

Dr Tony Chapman
Assistant Dean (Enterprise)
